Artificial Intelligence and Theology – concepts once thought to occupy separate spheres – are now colliding in ways that are both profound and unsettling.

This course will explore the moral, metaphysical, and spiritual implications of cutting-edge AI through the lens of Christian theology, technological realism, and soulful inquiry. Drawing on contemporary AI developments and classical theological thought, we'll examine how this unprecedented moment challenges our understanding of creation, consciousness, personhood, and divine agency. Designed for thinkers, seekers, and practitioners, this course invites rigorous reflection on what it means to be human in an age of intelligent machines.
